Harold Ahearn, Daniel Sullivan, Frank Delmore, "Bill" Connors and John Laverty, members of Danny’s gang, sang many popular tunes, but perhaps the biggest hit of all was scored by "Jack" McArdle’s recitation of "The Battle of Cognac." This ditty, which carries the boys through all of the experiences they met "over there," was superbly put over by McArdle.

There were dancing specialties by Manuel Diaz, and during the evening William P. McCarthy’s Old Timers played spirited tunes and gave accompaniment to the singers. Andrew Roarke's monologlog, particularly his political speech, got a great laugh.
