LOWELL NATIVE EJECTED FROM MCCARTHY HEARING

Refuses to Tell Senator About His Communist Connections

BOSTON, Jan. 16, 1954—Sen. McCarthy’s hearing into subversion in industry was thrown into an uproar today when Nathaniel Mills, a suspended General Electric Co. employee stood in the rear of the courtroom and shouted: “Senator, I refuse you of computing with the committee. The senator told him the маршalls were not clear.

It was the third ejection of the session. Earlier, on the Wisconsin Senator’s order, marshalls removed from the courtroom Theodore Pappas, of Lynn, an earlier witness, and his counsel, Oliver S. Allen.

Pappas, who lives at Snows Street in Lowell graduated from Harvard magna cum laude in 1947, with the degree of bachelor of arts. He attended Harvard Law school. He is a veteran of World War II and while in the service, was awarded Bronze Star and Purple Heart. McCarthy announced at the conclusion of the morning hearing that a total of nine General Electric workers had been removed from the courtroom.

The company has announced a policy of suspending such workers who invoke the self-incrimination amendment of the Constitution.

Mills is under suspension by General Electric for refusing to answer questions concerning Communists before the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee. He has stood as a one-man subcommittee, and he said he could be called to testify before the Senate Internal Security Senate.

The witness did say, “I have nothing against this country.”

He again refused.

He refused to tell Senator about his Communist connections.

To some, when Pappas was asked a question, the answer was: “Refuse to tell Senator about his Communist connections.”

After interruping and saying: “You have a better law school.” But Pappas declined to say in response to further questions whether he became a Communist while at Harvard or before. Pappas then told the court on the basis of possible self-incrimination under the Fifth Amendment and on the ground that his answer “would lead to self-incrimination.” Pappas said the latter reason for declining to answer a series of questions about Communist party connections.

“Have you a bar and a lawyer for a long time and I have never seen a fellow who didn’t think he was unfairly persecuted.” Earlier, Victor Bolys of Bostons, 41, once named by Sen. McCarthy here last November. He invoked the Fifth Amendment when he refused to answer any questions on Communist party connections.

But Pappas refused.

When Nathaniel Mills, a suspended General Electric Co. worker presented at the hearing that a total of nine General Electric workers had been removed from the courtroom.

Deputy U.S. Marshalls forcibly ejected the stoutly-resistant witness who continued a tirade as the majority of spectators stood and shouted: “Throw him out.” A few policemen rode to the street floor with him.

As Mills was hustled down the corridor by the deputies, he shouted, “Let me get my coat on.” As they pushed him into the chambers, he said: “Put it on in the elevator.” Two marshals rode to the street floor with him.

Pappas refused to tell Senator about his Communist connections.
