Alexander finds parallels in Hearst case

by MARIA LEIBERT

"Christian Science Monitor

NEW YORK — In March of 1974, Shana Alexander was five years old. The story of her life as told in "Anyone's Daughter," her first novel, is that of the young Patty Hearst.

"Patty got put on trial because she was rich. People saw her as a spoiled brat who would get away with her crimes. Patty was treated as a femicide, as a maiden in distress. A boy got put on trial because he knew a girl and of his way of life. "I was obsessed with the case," Mrs. Alexander explained. "I saw it as the key element of the story." She was one of the voices of women's lib.... I saw it as the key element of the story."

In March of 1974, Shana Alexander was five years old. The story of her life as told in "Anyone's Daughter," her first novel, is that of the young Patty Hearst.

"Patty got put on trial because she was rich. People saw her as a spoiled brat who would get away with her crimes. Patty was treated as a femicide, as a maiden in distress. A boy got put on trial because he knew a girl and of his way of life. "I was obsessed with the case," Mrs. Alexander explained. "I saw it as the key element of the story." She was one of the voices of women's lib.... I saw it as the key element of the story."